Choose-a-Bike.com

Welcome! This was created by a group of bicycle lovers who pooled their experience to help beginners. Enjoy! Buying a new bike can be broken down into three simple steps:

1. Decide on the type of bike.

This will depend on where you plan to ride it, based on the surface(s) each is built for:

Riding Surfaces	Bike Types
Paved roads and paths	Road bikes, Hybrid bikes
Pavement (from perfect to damaged) and natural surfaces	Hybrid bikes
All-road riding (from perfect to stony or mountain roads)	Gravel bikes and Touring bikes
Dirt roads and trails	Mountain bikes

2. Consider cost and performance.

Expect to pay more for higher-performance components or materials. When considering your budget, keep in mind the following factors that can add cost:

Full or front-only suspension: Full-suspension bikes generally cost more, but also offer a smoother ride.

Carbon vs. aluminum: Lightweight carbon frames offer best performance and ride quality — they also mean higher price. Aluminum-frame bikes can be found at every price point.

Component quality: A bike's components are usually part of a group. For higher-priced frames, the best-suited group will be more highly-tuned and will cost more.

3. Check that your bike will fit you.

The right frame size is based on your height. Then, "stand-over height" (distance between your body and the top of the frame when you stand over the bike) and "reach" (distance from seat to handlebar) can be fine-tuned.

Road bikes

- have a drop-bar handlebar (curling down and toward the rear).
- put the rider in a unique bent-forward riding posture.

Touring bikes

- a shape that helps keep you more comfortable on longer rides
- wider tires give the wheels grip on a variety of surfaces.

Mountain bikes

- shock-absorbing features and sturdy frames
- have lower gears to ride up steep hills.

36. Who is this website intended for?
- (A) Bicycle manufacturers
 - (B) Bicycle shop staff
 - (C) Bicycle beginners
 - (D) Bicycle owners
37. Which riding surface are hybrid bicycles NOT recommended for?
- (A) Dirt roads
 - (B) Pavement
 - (C) Natural surfaces
 - (D) Paths
38. Which of the following is true about full-suspension bikes, compared to front-only suspension bikes?
- (A) They always cost more.
 - (B) The ride is less rough.
 - (C) They use different frame materials.
 - (D) All of the above
39. Which of the following is particular to road bikes?
- (A) They have a larger number of gears.
 - (B) They are only suited to one type of riding surface.
 - (C) The riding position is unusual.
 - (D) They always use aluminum frames.
40. What is the main point in finding the correct frame size?
- (A) The distance between your body and the top of the frame
 - (B) The wheel size
 - (C) How far it is from the seat to the handlebars
 - (D) How tall the rider is

7 次の文章を読み、41～45 の質問の答えとして最も適当なものを(A)～(D)から一つずつ選びなさい。

Nearly two-thirds of the population report having recurring dreams. Recurring dreams are dreams that repeat more than once over a long period. Some of the most common recurring dreams are: falling, losing teeth, being late, being chased, being in a natural disaster, or being naked in a public place. More than half of the time the dreams involve some feeling of danger. They often also involve experiencing emotions such as sadness, anger, fear, or guilt.

Why do recurring dreams happen? Studies show that, in general, dreams help us regulate our emotions and adapt to stressful events. Dreams may even help us process painful or difficult situations. Recurring dreams appear to be coming from unresolved conflict in the dreamer's life and often occur during times of stress.

What can you do to try to reduce or eliminate unpleasant recurring dreams? One technique that may be helpful is to visualize the dream while awake and then change the end of the dream to something more positive. This processing and rewriting of the dream in an awake state will often change the frequency or content of the dream if it recurs in the future.

There are several other things you can do. Taking proactive steps that reduce stress during sleep, like using a heavy bedcover, drinking certain herb teas which naturally reduce stress (camomile is the most well-known) in the evening and listening to relaxing music before sleeping, can have a very positive effect on feelings of anxiety when going to bed. You can also improve the quality of your sleep through actions you take earlier in the day. Don't drink any caffeine at least six hours before your bedtime. Don't go to bed hungry but also make sure your last big meal is at least two hours before you intend to sleep.

41. What are recurring dreams?
- (A) Dreams which are common
 - (B) Dreams which happen more than once
 - (C) Dreams which contain a feeling of danger
 - (D) Dreams which involve experiencing negative emotions
42. Which of the following could be a common recurring dream?
- (A) Seeing someone fall
 - (B) Chasing someone
 - (C) Being in an earthquake
 - (D) Being naked at home
43. Which of the following is NOT true of dreams?
- (A) They prevent any future conflict in the dreamer's life.
 - (B) They aid us in dealing with difficult situations.
 - (C) They enable us to deal with stressful events.
 - (D) They help us control our emotions.
44. What is suggested in dealing with unpleasant recurring dreams?
- (A) To visualize the dream when asleep, then change the end when you wake up
 - (B) To visualize the dream when awake, then change the ending when you are asleep
 - (C) To visualize the dream when asleep and change the end before you wake up
 - (D) To visualize the dream when awake and change the end before you sleep
45. In the passage, what else is suggested to deal with unpleasant recurring dreams?
- (A) Don't drink caffeine for more than six hours each day.
 - (B) Make sure you have a big meal that lasts more than two hours.
 - (C) Listen to relaxing music much earlier in the day.
 - (D) Reduce stress while sleeping by using a heavy bedcover.

The keeping of pets by many members of society is relatively recent. Until the nineteenth century, most animals that lived alongside humans were working animals that were not regarded sentimentally. In the nineteenth and twentieth centuries the number of people living in cities grew rapidly and working animals began to feature less in people's daily lives. When disposable income later grew, pets became desirable. In 2016, 51% of British adults were pet owners and many loved their pet more than they loved their partner (12%), their children (9%) or their best friend (24%).

Recent scientific research has led some to question the morality of pet ownership. Such research is revealing that the emotional lives of animals are far more complex than we once thought. For some, the consequence of these discoveries is that humans have little or no right to treat animals as property and decide where they live and what they eat. Several places have moved to change the legal status of animals. Back in 2001, the U.S. state of Rhode Island was the first to act in changing the legal name of pet owners to “pet guardians.” The government of New Zealand recognized animals as conscious beings in 2015, in effect stating that they were no longer property.

There is another way of looking at this issue, however. Many breeds of certain animal species — dogs and cats, for example — have a long history of being human companions. Indeed, forcing them to live in a wild environment that they are no longer fit for would likely lead them to go extinct. Most people would agree that adopting an animal that has no home is clearly a morally good thing to do. How can it be morally wrong to keep a species in existence so that it gives many people companionship and great happiness, while being provided with a loving home and an apparently happy life?

46. Since when has the keeping of pets become popular?
- (A) Since before the nineteenth century
 - (B) Since most animals were working animals
 - (C) Since cities started growing rapidly
 - (D) Since disposable income began growing
47. In 2016, what was true about British pet owners?
- (A) 51% of them loved their pet more than their partner.
 - (B) 12% loved their partner more than their pet.
 - (C) 24% loved their best friend more than their pet.
 - (D) 9% loved their pet more than their children.
48. What has scientific research about animals discovered?
- (A) That animals experience emotions
 - (B) That animals understand logical consequences
 - (C) That animals have complex thoughts
 - (D) That animals understand morality
49. Which of the following has NOT happened as a result of scientific discoveries about animals?
- (A) Some people have started to think that it is immoral to keep pets.
 - (B) Some people have argued that governments should decide what animals eat.
 - (C) Some places have started moves to change the legal status of pet owners.
 - (D) Some places have stopped recognizing animals as human property.
50. What is a different way of thinking about the issue of pet ownership?
- (A) Many animals can be human companions for a long time.
 - (B) If some species were not human pets, they would disappear forever.
 - (C) If animals lived in a wild environment, they would be more fit.
 - (D) It can be morally wrong to keep a species in existence.
